European Union (EU)

European Union Blue Card is a path to Immigration to Europe and for those wanting to work in Europe. The "Blue EU Labour Card", has been inspired by the US "green card" and takes its name from the EU flag. The aim of the Blue Card is to give EU companies the ability to easily recruit highly skilled workers with specialized skills which are difficult to find in the European Union. The European Commission says the EU needs 20 million skilled immigrants over the next 20 years, especially in the computer technology and engineering sectors. Currently many companies have difficulty finding suitable workers to fill specialist positions within the Healthcare, Engineering, Science & Information Technology Sectors and tourism. It is predicted the EU economy will need between 384,000 and 700,000 IT workers by 2015, and by 2020, between one and two million health-care workers. The blue card will help EU employers who need to bring in foreign skilled labour to fill these types of specialist level jobs.

About EU Blue Card

A job offer in an EU Country is mandatory to apply for an EU Blue card visa. For the first two years, the migrant must live and work in the country from where the blue card is initially issued. After this, the migrant can move to any other country if you can find work there.
